A WORD FROM OUR SECRETARY

Good afternoon,

I hope you are all enjoying the end of the summer season. We are definitely hoping for a drier fall, with time to get things dried out and cleaned up before the frost comes.

You may have seen on our website and Facebook page that we are having an auction for some lovely vintage jewelry. The insert in this newsletter highlights the seven pieces that were donated to benefit the PCHA. Visit www.32auctions.com/18jewelry to place your bids!

Our annual quilt raffle will be running through March 2019, due to a number of difficulties in getting it running this year. For just $10 a ticket, prizes include a HAND-MADE QUILT donated by Robin & Dave Phillips value, Cabela's Gift Card, Sheplers Gift Card, and more. This is one of the largest contributors to the treasury of the club. The drawing will be during the May show. Please Sell Your Tickets, and call Bill Stein if you need more!

Thank you all for a great Memorial Show! Honoring those who have gone before is an important element of our PCHA family, and it's always encouraging to see the number of people who sponsor, donate and help out for this event.

I hope to see you at some of the remaining shows and clinics this year,
Joanne Thayer

Cutting Article Highlight

“The Rhythm of Working a Cow”

One challenge in working a cow is to get accuracy of position, correct form of the turn and a beautiful rhythm all synchronized with the speed of the cow.

This video is a great example of the pretty form and rhythm we all aspire to achieve as we work a cow. Below the video, I explain the component parts of the rhythm.

I posted the video to help you more clearly see those pieces as you read the article, and watch Lloyd Cox and Blackish work a cow.

The full article will be in the October Newsletter

TRAINING A RELAXED AND HAPPY TRAIL HORSE

Baby Steps are Best!
Start with short, slow walks
Gradually increase distance
Once everyone is comfortable
You can add a trot or canter

Excerpted from article by Sarah Crampton in Action Rider Tack, July 19, 2018.
For the full article, visit <https://www.actionridertack.com/Articles.asp?ID=256>

Out on the trail is not the ideal time to train. That's why we ride in an arena in a controlled environment. If you don't have a fenced arena, create yourself a training area by roping off a section of your pasture, or put logs or poles on the ground to cordon off your training space. It's not fun to discover that your horse's brakes don't work all that well when you pick up the canter with a couple of your riding cronies. Just as dangerous as no brakes is a sticky gas pedal. Your horse must know that going forward when asked is not a negotiable request. You can check your horse's response to your aids by testing him in the arena. Take every opportunity to ride through the puddle, past the flapping jacket on the arena gait, walking over ground poles, riding in company and by yourself. Once you feel you are completely in charge and are comfortable with your horse's response and cooperation in all gaits, you are ready to venture out.

Going out on the trail should mean a relaxing time for your horse. When you start out with a young horse, a new horse, or tuning up your horse, take baby steps to develop your horse's attitude about the trail. ...

Taking the time to advance your rides with baby steps can help the development of your laid-back and happy trail horse. And the old saying, "walk the first and last mile" is still sound advice.

A FOAL'S FIRST LESSONS

EVEN THE EARLIEST TRAINING SESSIONS CAN SET A YOUNGSTER ON THE PATH TO BECOMING THE SENSITIVE, WILLING HORSE YOU WANT HIM TO BE ONE DAY.

JONATHAN FIELD, JUL 3, 2018

I love handling foals. Each time I do, I feel like I'm touching the future. I think about what a youngster will be like to ride one day and how he'll relate to people. And I put a lot of thought into every interaction because I know that how a foal or weanling is handled early can have a lasting effect on what kind of horse he becomes.

When my students handle foals and weanlings, I always remind them that horses are a precocial species, which means that they are relatively mature and autonomous at birth. Within a few hours of coming into the world, foals are up and moving, sorting out quickly where to nurse and how to interact with the herd. Why is that important? Because it means that they are neurologically capable of learning.

Which explains one of the two big mistakes that I often see people make when working with young horses. They assume foals are similar to human babies and treat them accordingly, which underestimates a young horse's capacity. Unlike human babies, who can't do much for themselves, equine babies are ready to absorb information.

The second common foal-handling mistake is allowing youngsters to act pushy or encroach on space because they are so small it doesn't seem to matter. Remember, that baby will soon be much bigger and more powerful. Allowing one kind of behavior when a horse is young and prohibiting it later when he matures creates confusion and conflict---and may lead to serious training issues. A horse will understandably think, "All this time this behavior was OK and now it's not?" It's far better to set boundaries from the start. So even when a foal is little and cute, I encourage people to interact with him in a way that would be appropriate when he is grown and weighs 1,100 pounds.

This doesn't mean, however, using techniques that take advantage of a foal's small size. Relying on physical force with a youngster instead of patiently teaching him what is required sets some dangerous precedents. For starters, these tactics soon become ineffective as the youngster grows larger and stronger. Worse, using too much force can take away a young horse's natural curiosity and sensitivity, making him dull and hard to motivate when interacting with people.

If you keep all of this in mind when you start a youngster, you can avoid inadvertently creating problems that will have to be dealt with later on. Education and feel are the key. And, above all, as you handle a foal or weanling, try to imagine the dream horse you'd like him to become one day.

READY FOR THE ROAD ROAD

The latest ELD regulations led to a series of articles about regulations, trucks, and trailers. But we haven't talked about those riding in the trucks and trailers. Traveling takes a toll on drivers, riders and horses. For the next few months, we'll be publishing tips for getting ready to travel, surviving during long-distance travel, and refreshing afterwards.

In "Stretches for Your Next Road Trip Adventure" (August 29, 2018), Andrew Grahovec discusses the potential lingering back problems that can result from unhealthy driving posture habits. "According to the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety, the average American makes 2.24 driving trips per day. This equates to an average of 31.5 miles covered and 50.6 minutes spent in the car every day. When you factor in this statistic with other variables, data suggests that most Americans spend 12 or more hours in a seated position, which includes time spent in the car, sitting at work or lounging around the house. And with an incorrect posture during any of these activities, getting behind the wheel for prolonged periods of time will only worsen your back, neck and shoulder pains. ... Adding to poor posture, while driving, your body experiences tense vibrations that cause it to move up and down due to uneven roads or how fast you accelerate/decelerate. You may also experience pain in your back from the spine twisting during sharp turns."

For trips over 4 hours long, you should stop and get out of the car every 2-3 hours. The following stretches & exercises are recommended by several sources to help keep you loose and refreshed before, during and after your trip:

- Ω Back stretch: Roll your shoulders forwards 5 times, then back 5 times, then reach arms up and arch back slightly.
- Ω Chest & Bicep Stretch: while standing, clasp your hands behind your back and raise them towards the ceiling. Hold 10 seconds.
- Ω Hamstring Stretch: while standing, bend at the waist and reach your hands towards the floor. Hold
- Ω Standing Quad Stretch: while standing, bend one knee and grasp the ankle. Gently pull your heel towards your hip.
- Ω Plank: a modified pushup position. On elbows and toes, lift mid-section so your body is straight. Hold.
- Ω Foot & Ankle Flex: while sitting, flex feet up and then point your toes. Repeat 3-5 times. Alternative: stand with toes on a step or curb, raise on tiptoes and then lower heels below step/curb. Repeat 3-5 times.

It's amazing what you can find while researching for an article! If you need proof that you should always double-check information and utilize good sources, I found an article that recommends setting the seat height in your car so that all instruments are at eye level. ... Isn't the windshield was supposed to be at eye level!
