A WORD FROM OUR SECRETARY

The PCHA would like to congratulate all of our WEEKEND CHAMPIONS from the SEPT 12 & 13 Memorial Cutting at the KEYSTONE HORSE CENTER in Bloomsburg, PA. It was a beautiful weekend of cutting and remembrance of not only our PCHA members that have passed away but also of those who lost their lives on 9/11.

Each year, the PCHA presents the Richie Gold Memorial Sportsmanship Award to a member who supports their fellow cutter, gives back to the club and shows graciousness in winning or losing. This year NCHA director Jack Werner & Joel Cohen and PCHA President Andy Sutliff awarded this special honor to Michelle Sterner McNutt at the PCHA September Memorial cutting.

A huge congratulations to Robert Meyer from Zoe Woodland Performance Horses on being the HIGH POINT RIDER WINNER FROM THE WEEKEND - winning a custom made halter from Alise Melvin - donated by Sandra & Fred Brown.

DOES YOUR HORSE HAVE COW SENSE?

Barbra Schulte, March 20, 2017

Today's cutting horse comes from breeding lines developed especially for the sport. They begin their careers early because many of the big competitions are for 3-year-olds. Barbra said that it takes 18 months to two years of training for a cutting horse to be ready for the show pen. But while you may not be able to turn your 7-year-old trail horse into a champion cutter, you can still find plenty of fun ways to interact with cattle.

Does My Horse Have "Cow"?

When cutting horse people talk about a horse's natural ability to cut cattle, they refer to it as "having cow," shorthand for having cow sense. Barbra said that sometimes a cutting horse will initially be afraid of a cow, and oddly enough, that often means that they have good cow sense.

"You can never say for sure that the horse has no cow in him," Barbra said. "If I were on a 7-year-old gelding who was a really quiet trail horse, and the horse had no response when we went past a pasture of cattle, it doesn't necessarily mean he has no cow. But if my friend's horse perked his ears and was interested to the point of just interest to downright fear, it could be either cow or shying."

Cutting horse trainers love to feel that excitement in a 2-year-old in a pen with a cow for the first time. "You can feel them underneath you kind of tense their muscles, put their ears up, or their heart starts to beat fast," Barbra said. "You can tell that there is something that they feel about the cow, which is a really good thing."

Another way you can tell that your horse might have cow sense is how he acts around dogs when he's loose in a pasture. "When dogs run through a pasture," Barbra said, "the horses who put their head down and follow the dogs or are really interested in them usually have a lot of cow."

Health Tip

What Your Horse's Hoof Angle Might Be Telling You

Taylor Fabus, Michigan State University Extension, and Gabrielle Dingell, MSU student - March 1, 2019

Horse owners should be aware of how hoof angle can relate to horse health.

The old adage, "No hoof, no horse," still stands true. Without a healthy hoof, your horse's overall health will be compromised. As caretakers of horses, it is important to know the basics skills to evaluate the health of your horse's hooves. What many people may not realize is that improperly trimmed hooves can not only be unappealing but could potentially cause extreme pain and even lameness if left uncared for.

A horse should have roughly a 50-degree angle of the front wall of the hoof to the ground. The angle of the hoof should match the angle of the dorsal surface of the pastern. If this angle, or line, is broken, it indicates a poor trim due to either too much toe, a concave break in the line, or too much heel, a convex break in the line. Virginia Therapeutic Farriery has a very good drawn illustration that expands on this break of line and the impact too much heel or toe can have on the pressure put on the pastern.
